▶ An Ottawa police crime scene investigator walks under police tape on Waller Street, not far from where the victim was found on Dalhousie Street.

Navid Niran died in hospital Sunday after he was stabbed at about 2:20 a.m. on Dalhousie Street. He is the first homicide victim this year in Ottawa.

The Ottawa police major crime unit closed off Dalhousie Street between Rideau and Besserer streets and a small stretch of Weller Street while they investigated.

There are clubs and restaurants that stay open late and a number of surveillance cameras on the stretch of Dalhousie where Niran was stabbed. Witnesses said it happened in front of Smoke's Poutinerie. Smoke's employee Jack Witmer said a co-worker came running into the restaurant right after the stabbing.

"We were in the middle of a huge rush and someone yelled, 'Oh s---, there's been a stabbing,' and everyone ran to the window," Witmer said.

Within a few minutes, police arrived, he said.

"It was business as usual and then after about an hour the cops showed up and told us to shut down."

Niran's sister Zahra said her family gathered together when they heard from police, but did not want to talk about what happened.

Budget cuts could cost 50,000 jobs: Report

SEAN KILPATRICK/THE CANADIAN PRESS

▶ Tony Clement is spearheading the government's review to identify budget savings.

More than 50,000 federal jobs could disappear by the time the Conservatives finish budget-cutting, with the resulting loss of services felt most by aboriginals, seniors, low-income earners and other vulnerable Canadians, an Ottawa think-tank predicts.

The Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives (CCPA) report looks at previous cuts by the Harper government and estimates the impact of the 2010 personnel cost freeze and the 2011 Strategic and Operating Review. The review announced in the 2011 budget aims to cut $4 billion a year in federal spending.

It's not clear where the cuts will be made, but based on departmental projections, CCPA senior economist David Macdonald estimates 50,000 to 60,000 federal public-service jobs or private-sector jobs funded by Ottawa will be gone by 2014.

When all cuts are implemented in two years, total annual federal spending will fall by $7.82 billion, the report says. If the cuts come exclusively from government jobs, federal employment (excluding RCMP and military personnel that have been declared off limits) would fall 20 per cent to 225,000 positions, Macdonald estimates.

Under that scenario, Ottawa-Gatineau would shed 22,400 jobs. But Macdonald says the cuts are unlikely to be absorbed only by federal public service. He says Ottawa will likely split cuts between jobs and federal funding transfers.

16.5-million reasons to smile

Barrhaven woman posted thank you video to Justin Bieber for supporting her cause

JOE LOFARO/METRO

▶ Hélène Campbell said she was thrilled to get a response to her Twitter campaign from pop sensation Justin Bieber over the weekend.

Now that Justin Bieber tweeted to Ottawa's Hélène Campbell over the weekend, the 20-year-old is wondering what to do next with her organ-donation awareness campaign as she waits for new lungs in Toronto.

On Saturday morning, the Biebster tweeted "@alungstory i got the word.... you have amazing strength. i got u. #BeAnOrganDonor" to Campbell, followed later by "help spread the word for @alungstory alungstory.ca #BeAnOrganDonor."

"That's a pretty big deal, 16.5-million followers who are now responding," said Campbell from Toronto, Sunday. "It's really exciting and encouraging, not just for me but everyone who helped."

News of her campaign spread across Canada and in other parts of the world, too. Websites in Peru and Germany reported on the Twitter love between Bieber and Campbell.

Campbell said a bookstore employee in Toronto recognized her on Saturday because she read about her campaign in the Metro Toronto newspaper.

"She said, 'I know who you are. Congratulations. What you're doing is awesome,'" said Campbell. "That is encouraging."

Campbell isn't sure what to do next to keep the awareness campaign going after getting a huge encouragement boost from Bieber, but is mulling over some ideas at the moment. She's tweeted to Ellen Degeneres, but has not heard anything back yet.

"For now I don't know what I'd do if Ellen got involved, because I'm just so overwhelmed at the positive response with Justin," she said.

Visitors to Alungstory.ca can keep track of her progress as she waits for a new pair of lungs.

Group cries foul over park tender

Friends of Lansdowne say OSEG is proceeding before a green light to build Fundraiser planned for Jan. 28

▶ Friends of Lansdowne on the steps of the Court of Appeal for Ontario.

The Court of Appeal hasn't reached a decision on Lansdowne Park yet, but both the developers and their opponents appear busy as they wait for a judgment.

The Ottawa Sports and Entertainment Group recently issued tenders to build commercial buildings on the disputed site and renovate Frank Clair Stadium.

The stadium tender due date is March 1 and work on Lansdowne Park was expected to begin this spring, should the Friends of Lansdowne lose their appeal. However, the Friends wrote of their displeasure in the tenders in an update to supporters sent this weekend.

"The arrogance of the City and OSEG in going out with these tender calls at this time is disturbing," the update says. "The legality of the partnership project is still before the courts. … Why are the City and OSEG proceeding as if they have the green light? What makes them so confident?"

Meanwhile, the group is calling for more donations and planning a fundraiser for Jan. 28. Members have previously talked about trying to take their fight against the development all the way to the Supreme Court, if necessary.

Navy overhauled intelligence as alleged spy lurked in midst

Former naval officer accused of leaking information

An unfolding spy drama involving a junior Canadian officer comes amid a determined effort by the Royal Canadian Navy to improve and expand its own intelligence capacity.

Over the past two years, military planners working for the head of the navy have been drawing a "road map" in order to provide decision-makers and warships at sea with better information on possible threats to domestic waters and among international shipping lanes, a series of internal documents reveal.

The strategy was widely circulated among senior echelons of the navy in 2010, according to a briefing list obtained by The Canadian Press.

▶ Sub-Lieut. Jeffrey Delisle

It could prove to be an intelligence bonanza in the wrong hands, providing insight into how Canadians gather information.

Neither the Harper government, nor National Defence will say whether Sub-Lieut. Jeffrey Delisle had access to the strategy — or early drafts of it.

Just what a potential spy might have been after and for whom has been the subject of frenzied speculation.

Officials have refused to discuss any and all aspects of the case.

But defence and intelligence experts say the real gold for a foreign power — be it Russia or some other nation — would lay in the country's methods, code words and placement of assets, both human and electronic.

Italian cruise ship search continues

- 19 are listed as missing, but number could be higher
- Some passengers may be unregistered: Official

Unregistered passengers might have been aboard the stricken cruise liner that capsized off Giglio, Italy, a top rescue official said Sunday, raising the possibility that the number of missing might be higher than previously announced.

Divers, meanwhile, pulled out a woman's body from the capsized Costa Concordia on Sunday, raising to 13 the number of people dead in the Jan. 13 accident.

Earlier, Italian authorities raised the possibility that the real number of the missing was unknown because some unregistered passengers might have been aboard.

"There could have been X persons who we don't know about who were inside, who were clandestine" passengers aboard the ship, Franco Gabrielli, the national civil protection official in charge of the rescue effort, told reporters at the island where the ship, with 4,200 people aboard, rammed a reef and sliced open its hull before turning over on its side.

But one of Concordia's officers, who's recovering from a broken leg suffered during the evacuation, dismissed the allegation that such passengers were on the ship.

"Everyone is registered and photographed. Everything's electronic," the Italian news agency ANSA quoted Manrico Giampedroni as saying.

Authorities have identified eight bodies, but are still trying to identify five badly decomposed corpses. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Families informed

Relatives of missing passengers were briefed Sunday, and met with Pierluigi Foschi, the CEO of Costa Crociere, SpA, the ship's operator.

- The missing include French passengers, an elderly American couple, a Peruvian crewwoman, an Indian crewman, and an Italian father and his five-year-old daughter.

Newt Gingrich trounced Mitt Romney in South Carolina's Republican presidential primary, upending the battle to challenge President Barack Obama in November and reviving a campaign that has twice been near collapse.

Stung by the worst week in his campaign, Romney told Fox News on Sunday that he will release his tax information, and said it was a mistake to hold off as long as he did in getting it out. He said the attention paid to the issue had become a distraction in his battle for the nomination.

Gingrich said on CNN that his hardline conservative views and sharp debating skills are needed if the Republicans are to take back the White House. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Chinese worldwide are kicking off one of year's most dumplings and fireworks for everyone Metro looks at

JORDAN POUILLE
METRO WORLD NEWS IN BEIJING

"May gold and jade come to fill your home." China is celebrating its Spring Festival on Monday. This special day marks the start of the Chinese year 4710 and eight days of feasting and wishing peace, happiness and prosperity to each other. In China, the elderly will enjoy the much-awaited annual show on state television while their married children will cook and visit friends and relatives.

The economy and industry will grind to a halt. The trains will be chaos as millions leave the factories and big cities in the south to rush home. But it's worth all the hassle: Chinese New Year is the only time migrant workers get to see their families.

The Spring Festival celebrations are all-day affairs; the louder, the better, in order to scare away evil spirits.

In Shanghai, the malls have swapped their Christmas decorations for red lanterns, dragon statues and loud traditional music. In Beijing, firecrackers are sold at every corner and lit anytime of the day. A word of caution: Two people died last year in the capital because of fireworks.

Chinese New Year is also a food festival. Prime Minister Wen Jiabao enjoys turning up at a worker's house, with a little apron, to cook dumplings in front of the cameras. Most people enjoy cheap yet healthy food, such as sweet clementines, taro cakes, braised catfish and some delicious pudding made of rice and sugar.

FIRST RAW CANNABIS DRUG MAY HIT SHELVES IN U.S.

A quarter-century after the U.S. Food and Drug Administration approved the first prescription drugs based on the main psychoactive ingredient in marijuana, additional medicines derived from or inspired by the cannabis plant itself could soon be making their way to pharmacy shelves, according to drug companies, small biotech firms and university scientists.

U.K.-based GW Pharma is in advanced trials for the first pharmaceutical developed from raw marijuana — a mouth spray it hopes to market as a treatment for cancer pain. It hopes to see FDA approval by the end of 2013. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RIM CEOs resign

- Balsillie and Lazaridis will be replaced by RIM COO Thorsten Heins
- Pair has been blamed for RIM's struggle to keep pace with competitors

BlackBerry maker Research in Motion's co-CEOs, Jim Balsillie and Mike Lazaridis, are stepping down.

The company says the pair who founded RIM will be replaced by Thorsten Heins, a chief operating officer who joined RIM four years ago from Siemens AG.

Balsillie and Lazaridis have headed Waterloo, Ont.-based RIM together for the past two decades.

The company took a big slide in 2011, dropping behind its peers in the lightning-paced smartphone market, suffering through the worst service outage in its history and losing tens of billions of dollars in market value.

And the PlayBook tablet, RIM's answer to the Apple iPad, failed to gain consumer support and the company was forced to give it deep discounts to help move the devices off store shelves.

Many investors held Balsillie and Lazaridis responsible for the company's problems and previously called for them to be replaced and also for the company to be sold or broken up.

KEPT WAITING AGAIN BY OC TRANSPO

URBAN COMPASS

STEVE COLLINS
METRO OTTAWA

There's a not-insubstantial chance that you're reading this while you wonder when (or if) your friggin' bus is coming.

Waiting is an unavoidable part of the public transit experience, and the limited charms of loitering at the bus stop are further diminished this time of year. The time can be killed by shivering, shuffling from one foot to the other or double-checking the schedule to see if your intended trip has fallen victim to last fall's "network optimization," which is still dealing out the odd surprise to the unwary.

How bad is it? Probably not as bad as it feels at the bus shelter. The latest quarterly report from OC Transpo, covering July to September, shows mediocre but slightly improved on-time arrivals in the morning rush (69.4 per cent) and slightly worsened punctuality in the afternoon (57.8 per cent).

Afternoon commuters stood a roughly equal chance of their bus arriving more than five minutes late (19.4 per cent) or already being gone because it came up to two minutes early (19.2 per cent).

"Transpo officials, who have been promising to develop their own app, expressed concern that the third-party versions might not be as accurate as their own, still-non-existent product."

As you wait, you have no way of knowing how long. If only there were some way to know where your bus was and hence when it might really arrive, as opposed to the schedule's guess.

There is, of course, a way of knowing. Our buses are fitted with on-board GPS showing their locations. It's been about a year since OC Transpo opened up and then revoked public access to this data, which local tech-heads had already begun to use for apps that let users track their bus in real time.

Transpo officials, who have been promising to develop their own app, expressed concern that the third-party versions might not be as accurate as their own, still-non-existent product. (Given a choice between potentially flawed information and no information, many would take the former, but no choice is being offered.)

Last week, OC Transpo GM Alain Mercier quite frankly told the transit commission that it's about money. They don't want to release the data until they can figure out how to exploit it for an estimated $1.1. million in potential ad revenue.

Transit riders, then, were being protected not from inaccurate data, as the story went last year, but from inadequately monetized data.

So now you wait for your bus and for real-time bus tracking. Both will probably show up eventually, and seemingly as far as OC Transpo's concerned, that's good enough.

Globe trotter

Dutch dream

Laura Dekker shows her passport where an immigration stamp shows the word Guppy, after arriving at Simpson Bay, St. Maarten, on Jan. 21.

The teenager ended a yearlong voyage aboard her sailboat named Guppy, making her the youngest person ever to sail alone around the globe. She was born to parents living on a boat near the coast of New Zealand and by age 10 she began dreaming about crossing the globe.

"There were moments where I was like, 'What the hell am I doing out here?,' but I never wanted to stop ... It's a dream, and I wanted to do it."

Record not recognized

The Guinness World Records and the World Sailing Speed Record Council did not verify her youngest sailor title, saying they no longer recognize records for youngest sailors to discourage dangerous attempts.

Dutch authorities tried to block Dekker's trip, arguing she was too young to risk her life, while school officials complained she should be in a classroom.

World tour

The teenager covered more than 27,000 nautical miles on a trip with stops that sound like a skim through a travel magazine: the Canary Islands, Panama, the Galapagos Islands, Tonga, Fiji, Bora Bora, Australia, South Africa and now, St. Maarten, from which she set out on Jan. 20, 2011.

Maggie-mania

She was Europe's first female head of government. But that distinction didn't matter to Margaret Thatcher She was the Iron Lady, after all, a woman on a mission to revolutionize her country.

HANDOUT PHOTO

"Defeat — I do not recognize the meaning of the word!" Margaret Thatcher wasn't called the Iron Lady for nothing.

And, despite the fact that she left 10 Downing Street 21 years ago, she commands fascination and fear. In fact, the Iron Lady — with Meryl Streep as a supreme Thatcher — has inspired a new Maggie-mania.

"My mother is an ex-hippie who starts crying when one mentions Thatcher, but many people in my generation feel a strong admiration for Thatcher," says Max Wind-Cowie, 26, a public opinion researcher at Demos, a London think tank. "People don't always agree with her policies, but at least you knew what she stood for. With today's politicians you can't really tell what they believe in."

To be sure, the Iron Lady knew what she believed in: individual liberty, free enterprise and anti-Communism.

"Even though there aren't many real Thatcherites, people who subscribe to Thatcher's ideology, left, many people look back at her with nostalgia", notes Richard Vinen, Professor of Modern European History at King's College, London, and author of Thatcher's Britain.

"Especially now, with the EU in crisis, people remember her for her opposition to the EU."

Indeed, today's Britain seems much closer to Thatcher's beliefs than the Britain she ruled. Last year 54 per cent of Britons thought social benefits (to low-income households) were too high, compared to 35 per cent in 1983. "Sympathy for people at the bottom of the heap has evaporated," notes Wind-Cowie.

Thatcher's actions

1. Kept Britain out of the single European currency.
2. Marginalized Britain's powerful trade unions. The move caused high unemployment, and anger, in Britain's North.
3. Privatized gas, electricity, telephony, British Airways and British Rail.
4. Cut welfare benefits.
5. Stood up to the Soviet Union, supported by Ronald Reagan.
6. Won the Falklands War against Argentina.

A day in the life of Maggie

The champion of individual responsibility can't remember anything, let alone take care of herself.

Margaret Thatcher suffers from dementia. "Though there's currently a lot of research into its causes, dementia is still an illness without a cure," explains Dr. Claudia Cooper, Lecturer in old-age psychiatry at University College, London.

"Patients often get lost or forget to eat, and they can also get depression or physical health problems."

The Iron Lady, ruler of the box office

A political movie, how dull. But Meryl Streep as Maggie Thatcher is a completely different matter.

During its first weekend in British cinemas, The Iron Lady captured the top box office spot, taking over $5 million .

This figure is nearly three times the box office achieved by The Queen when it opened in 2006.

Twentieth Century Fox, the film's distributor, reported that The Iron Lady even did well in Britain's North, where Thatcher remains disliked, even loathed. Meryl Streep won a Golden Globe for the role.

The softer side of haute couture

The Project Runway All Stars prove reality TV isn't always about being horrible to your fellow contestants But the claws may still come out this season Designers have only six hours to complete their next challenge

THE WORD

DOROTHY ROBINSON
SCENE@METRONEWS.CA

Aside from occasional dust-ups at the Neiman Marcus accessory wall, Project Runway is one reality show that isn't known for its backbiting.

At a New York screening of the spin-off Project Runway All Stars contestants — including the dashing Austin Scarlett in beads and a bow tie — broke from the usual red carpet decorum to greet each other with squeals and hugs.

"I keep in touch with a lot of them," said Kara Janx. "I've formed some really solid relationships."

So how do these "all stars" — favourite designers from the first eight seasons of Project Runway who are competing once again in a new series of fashion challenges — make it work the second time around?

"You need to admire your fellow designers and get inspired by each other," said Kenley Collins, wearing her trademark red lipstick. "Make your life a little easier and just get along!"

"She's such a diva," joked Michael Costello, cutting in to throw an arm around Collins.

Meanwhile, Janx cited "mutual respect, mutual understanding" as the key.

"I don't feel like you have to step on toes to get ahead," she said. "You're just so curious to see what other designers will bring to the table."

It's not just contestants who noticed the camaraderie on set.

"Fashion is a community," said designer Isaac Mizrahi, one of the show's judges. But that all might change in an upcoming episode, when the designers are given only six hours to complete a challenge.

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

▶ Some of the Project Runway All Stars: Mondo Guerra, left, Kenley Collins, Michael Costello, Kara Janx, and Austin Scarlett were all smiles Thursday in New York City.

Executive producer Rob Bagshaw says those kinds of tasks were created to pit contestants "against the challenge instead of each other."

We'll see if the needles come out.

WITH ADDITIONAL REPORTING FROM REBECCA FINKEL

What's up with Heidi and Seal?

Speaking of Project Runway, shocking news broke over the weekend that host Heidi Klum is planning to file for divorce from husband Seal, per TMZ. But now gossips and "sources" the world over are backtracking.

"Nothing is finalized or for sure," a friend of the two told Us Weekly. "Seal flew back from the U.K. yesterday and he and Heidi are in the house together now."

According to some reports, Klum is fed up with Seal's partying lifestyle.

"When they had their holiday in Ibiza in the summer last year, Seal hit it hard, was out at clubs and with his friends a lot and Heidi was left with their kids trying to enjoy herself," a source told The Mirror.

This is so sad; they always seemed like a celebrity couple who would make it. Hopefully Seal will man up and realize that Klum is a better option than the bottle. If not, there is truly no hope for any Hollywood marriage.

Heather's no stranger to rehab

Prior to her hospitalization for a potential overdose on alcohol and prescription pills, Heather Locklear had reportedly been in rehab, though her family tried to keep it a secret, sources tell Us Weekly.

"Heather has been out of control for many years," a source says.

"Her drinking has caused her to fall out of many friendships."

And her recent split from fiancé Jack Wagner reportedly sent her off the deep end.

"She doesn't get out of bed most days," the source explains.

"Jack kept her on the straight and narrow, but he couldn't keep Heather sober."

Unfortunately, though Locklear did seek treatment after the split, she "didn't take it seriously," the source says.

Florida scientists have discovered that starting around six months, babies begin shifting from the intent eye gaze of early infancy to studying mouths when people talk.

"The baby, in order to imitate you, has to figure out how to shape their lips to make that particular sound they're hearing," explains developmental psychologist David Lewkowicz of Florida Atlantic University, who led the study.

Kids says the darndest things

▶The proud parents of the f-bomb dropping toddler.

On a recent episode of Modern Family, a toddler uses a bad word Our mommyish.com writer wonders, do you watch what curse words you say around your kids?

On last week's Modern Family, toddler Lily dropped an F-bomb, to the utter horror of her parents.

The character is two-and-a-half-years old. The episode's title? Little Bo Bleep. This was the first time a scripted family TV show has had a child utter the profanity that rhymes with puck. (Don't worry, it wasn't audible to the viewer.)

As the owner of a horrible potty mouth, I could not relate to this more.

The fact is, actually, that I have dropped my cussing dramatically since the birth of my first child. And yet … it was just a couple of years ago that my parents were watching my children when my then two-and-a-half-year old said "s—."

The worst thing? She used it correctly. Like, she broke something and dropped the S-bomb. My mother is a public school teacher who has literally never cussed. My dad is a pastor. When my mom politely told me the news, I just immediately responded by apologizing. There was no use pretending that she had picked it up from anyone but me. Everyone knows I have problems cussing.

Still, it was an important moment that led to further efforts to stop my sailor-level vocabulary. But apparently, it's not enough.

During last week's football game, I think I lost years off my life as I cheered. Every time something bad happened, I modified cuss words. Or, well, I cussed in foreign languages. My husband told me to watch it around the kids. I hate it when he's right.

Another friend told me about how her kids were playing with friends in the neighborhood while parents sat outside and chatted. The kids were on bikes and one kid cut another kid off at the end of the cul-de-sac. "Get out of the way, A—hole" one little boy exclaimed, not even particularly upset.

The father of that child, blushing, told the boy to watch his language and then said something about how he'd have to talk to him later. But everyone laughed nervously because they knew the kid had picked it up from his parents.

And this is the shame of the child's potty mouth. It's almost always a complete reflection of our lack of control as parents, our inability to speak kindly to our neighbors and fellow citizens or, worse, the members of our own family.

We like to pretend, particularly among our peers, that we're great examples to our kids. When our children reveal that we're not, it's embarrassing. But it's also chastening and a great reminder of why children are such a blessing. They frequently help us become better people.

MOLLIE HEMINGWAY, MOMMYISH.COM

No Cussing Club

Even before the episode aired last week, an anti-profanity crusader asked ABC to pull the episode. McKay Hatch, 18, founded the No Cussing Club in 2007. He asked his club's members, whom he said number 35,000 in the U.S. and about three dozen other countries, to complain to ABC.

Protestors' take
"Our main goal is to stop this from happening," said Hatch. "If we don't, at least ABC knows that people all over the world don't want to have a two-year-old saying the 'F-bomb' on TV. We hope they know better."

The network's take
"We thought it was a very natural story, since as parents, we've all been through this. We are not a sexually charged show. It has a very warm tone so people accept it more. I'm sure we'll have some detractors," said Steven Levitan, creator and executive producer of the sitcom with Christopher Lloyd.

For a dragon-sized appetite

Start Chinese New Year off right Try Chinese long beans for a long life

MATTHEW MEAD/ THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

▶ This recipe makes eight servings.

Eating long beans to symbolize a long life is a hallmark of Chinese New Year.

These beans often go by other names, including asparagus beans, yard-long beans and snake beans.

Since this new year is the year of the dragon, more specifically the water dragon, serve this longevity dish with the dragon of the sea — lobster. If lobster isn't available, shrimp is another good choice.

Preparation:

1 In wok over medium-high, heat vegetable oil. Add peppercorns, five-spice powder and garlic. Heat, stirring constantly, for 30 seconds.

2 Add beans and toss to coat. Add water, oyster sauce, and soy sauce and cover. Allow beans to steam for 5 mins., or until just tender. Add sesame oil, Sriracha, lobster meat and sesame seeds. Toss and cook until heated. Serve.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ingredients:

- 15 ml (1 tbsp) vegetable oil
- 1 ml (1/4 tsp) Sichuan peppercorns, crushed
- 2 ml (1/2 tsp) Chinese five-spice powder
- 2 cloves garlic, minced
- 750 grams (1 1/2 pounds) Chinese long beans
- 125 ml (1/2 cup) water
- 50 ml (1/4 cup) oyster sauce
- 15 ml (1 tbsp) soy sauce
- 15 ml (1 tbsp) toasted sesame oil
- Splash of Sriracha sauce
- 210 grams (7 ounces) cooked lobster meat, chopped
- 15 ml (1 tbsp) toasted sesame seeds

Cleaner, greener vacuum

Lower your energy consumption with vacuums that are more efficient Make a difference

BEN KNIGHT
LIFE@METRONEWS.CA

The standard household vacuum cleaner: Very clean, but is it green?

Vacuums capture and dispose of far more dust than brooms, but they also consume power, produce noise, and most models leave behind an endless series of dust-filled bags that need to be thrown out.

Is there a way to do this better?

"It's a product category no one really has been thinking about before as something that needs an environmental improvement," says Cecilia Nord, vice president of sustainability for Electrolux Small Appliances.

"As it turns out, you can actually achieve improvement by focusing on energy consumption, and also the materials in the product. It's not insignificant."

Her company produces greener sister versions of its entire vacuum cleaner product line. They may not yet be as widely available, but some pretty efficient, powerful machines are being produced.

"Depending on the model, we range from 33-50 per cent lower energy consumption," Nord says. "The fantastic thing is, we make this big saving in energy consumption, and only lose one percentage point in actual cleaning performance."

ISTOCK PHOTO

There are options for greener vacuums.

Electrolux is not alone. Rainbow, Sanitaire, Filter Queen, Miele and Dyson highlight a long — and ever-growing — list of manufacturers building more environmentally friendly machines.

1%
Loss of cleaning power — in exchange for a 33 to 50 per cent cut in power usage — with a top-quality green vacuum cleaner.

"Historically, the consumer has been led to believe that if you have a high-wattage vacuum, it's a powerful cleaner," says Nord. "But that has nothing to do with it. It's how well it's designed that provides the cleaning performance."

Noise remains an issue, although more-efficient vacuum cleaners tend to also be slightly quieter.

And though bagless vacuums certainly exist, even vacuum bags are gradually being greened.

"We're finding renewable resources that can be transferred into materials that do the same job as non-renewable ones," she says. "We've actually started marketing a vacuum cleaner dust bag that is made out of corn starch."

There's even a designer line of cleaners — Vac from the Sea — made from plastic pollution harvested from the world's oceans.

"When we started working with recycled plastics, we realized how hard it was for us, as a manufacturer, to come by plastics of a good enough quality. We found local green organizations that are already working with this. We helped them collect plastic, and we use it to make special vacuum cleaners."

Slipping on your study promises?

There's a good chance you set the bar too high for yourself ◐ Take in these tips and start studying the smart way

BRUCE WALSH
LIFE@METRONEWS.CA
METRO WORLD NEWS

College and university students across the country are currently struggling with the first stages of that age-old new year's resolution: This year, I'm going to study for an impossible number of hours a day!

Lisa Jacobson is the founder of Inspirica, a company that has been teaching study habits for 25 years.

Her advice as the semester kicks off is simple: Don't try to drastically change yourself with one quick turn of the calendar page.

ISTOCK

▶ Think about pulling one or two books out of that pile.

When it comes to studying, why do new year's resolutions fail?

They're too big. They say, "I'm going to read for three hours a night, every night." I really believe that, when it comes to college students, incremental changes are far more effective. It's trying to go just a step above where you were.

What's a good first step?

It's an easy one. Just take 15 minutes, sit down on your bed and quietly look at your dorm. Be honest with yourself. Is this a place where I can focus? Set yourself up. Go to the container store and make sure everything has a place.

Ask yourself, "When is the most quiet, peaceful time in this space?" Carve out just a half hour during that time of day to hit the books.

So, are new year's resolutions about studying a bad idea?

I think they can work if the goal is to get to a place where you're working smarter, not necessarily harder.

Resolutions can be helpful because you're teaching yourself life skills.

Sometimes parents request tutoring for their kids in college — and I advise that they hold off on taking control like that, because college is the time to learn how to advocate for yourself.

Do some students respond better to background noise as opposed to a quiet room?

Yes! Take notice of when you can concentrate, when you get distracted. Some people need lots of activity around them, so they need to find a busy time at a cafe and make sure they plop themselves down there for 30 minutes a day.

An office of opposites

A happy workplace is one of many faces from many different places

JULIA WEST
LIFE@METRONEWS.CA
MWN IN PHILADELPHIA

It's well understood that a workplace of similarly minded drones makes for a static, uninspired environment.

Also, it is required by law that companies be equal-opportunity employers.

But aside from the obvious and the legal, there are reasons that diversity — regardless of the form it takes — lends itself to building a stronger company.

Dr. James Smither, Professor of Management at La Salle University, defines diversity as "the differences among people in terms of their personalities, underlying values and training."

It is these aspects that make a powerful team.

"Deep diversity can be beneficial to the team as a whole because it creates a team with broader knowledge and perspectives that in turn can enhance the quality of problem-solving and decision-making," he says.

The benefits of a diverse workforce aren't limited to the office.

"The advantages of diverse workplaces extend beyond America's borders," says Peter Aranda, CEO at The Consortium for Graduate Study in Management.

"The world is quickly becoming one giant multicultural marketplace in which U.S. companies vie for market share with competitors across the world.

If American businesses want to stay in the game, they must become much more attuned to the nuances and needs of disparate cultures than they've been in the past."

ISTOCK

▶ Building a team with different backgrounds inherently produces one with a wider perspective.

The boy block

Teacher urges retooled approach to raising boys in new book Points finger at computer-crazed world for dip in academic success of young males

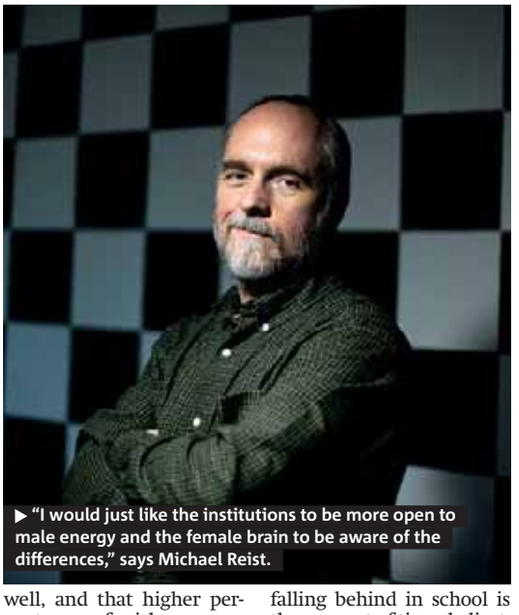
As a longtime teacher and father of four, Michael Reist has had a front-row view of the ever-changing cultural landscape and its impact on youngsters.

And with the omnipresence of the Internet, tech gadgets and video games, he believes the task of educating and parenting kids needs to adapt with the evolving times.

In his new book, Raising Boys in a New Kind of World (Dundurn), Reist is encouraging a retooled approach in both practice and thinking when it comes to rearing boys in a media-saturated culture.

Reist has spoken extensively to parent groups and education conferences across Canada, with the main workshops centred around gender differences in learning and raising kids in a new world.

While girls have surged academically in recent years, Reist said statistics show boys aren't faring as well, and that higher percentages of girls are enrolling in universities.



▶ "I would just like the institutions to be more open to male energy and the female brain to be aware of the differences," says Michael Reist.

Reist said cyberspace has had a huge influence. Part of the reason boys are falling behind in school is the amount of time dedicated to screens, which offer a feast of visuals and movement through space that are alluring to the male brain, he noted.

He understands parents' concerns with respect to too much screen time and recognizes the need for setting boundaries to limit usage; but Reist said there's nothing wrong with cyberspace or video games.

In the book, he outlines reasons why video games are good, such as allowing kids to relieve stress and offering an outlet for aggression. And while some see gaming as an isolating experience, he writes there is also a social aspect, as males tend to bond shoulder-to-shoulder through a shared activity.

"We're getting these boys who are spatial geniuses, they come into class and they're able to conquer level 500 of World of Warcraft or Call of Duty," said Reist. "But they come into my class where the job is to read a 300-page novel and to write a 1,500-word essay, and that's a bigger leap today than it was 20 years ago."

"The culture has become more and more visual, and the culture has become more and more electronic."

Reist said one of his book's main messages is not condemning the new world, but rather empathy for today's kids who have to contend with turning off cellphones, video games, TVs and computers before settling into an assigned task. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Plan of action

Ways to wake them up

- Reist writes that boys have a love and need for movement and prefer actions over words.
- He has observed in teaching that they tend to progress more slowly through the stages of language processing.
- He writes that much like a computer going into sleep mode, the male brain can act in a similar way when it's not stimulated.
- Cueing students visually through eye contact, verbally or through touch like a tap on the shoulder — or even just standing nearby — can help boys who may be zoning out

Improv to improve

Youth are using improv to boost confidence and communication skills

HO/JEREMY VOLTZ/THE CANADIAN PRESS

▶ Improv is no longer reserved solely for people with quick wit and a sharp tongue. Personalities of all sorts are becoming involved with the activity.

Brendan McGowan, like most university students, spends his days juggling essays with impending exams while trying to make it to class on time. But once a week the 22-year-old psychology major sets aside the stress of higher education to take up a persona other than his own.

He's one of a growing number of youth who are embracing improvisational theatre, or improv as it's better known. Aside from the laughs it provides, those who engage in the performances acted entirely without a script say they're boosting their confidence, learning how to communicate better and tapping into a whole new community of friends, all while having a good time.

"I'll honestly say that if I did not have improv, I would be the most stressed out person that I would have ever met," says McGowan, president of Ryerson University's Barrel of Monkeys Improv team.

"It's just two hours of laughing, having a good time, and you feel refreshed afterwards ... I don't know where the stress went but it's gone and I'm happy."

Improv, perhaps best known through the hit show Whose Line Is It Anyway, isn't just for theatre or arts majors. Increasingly, student from a variety of backgrounds, from journalism to engineering, try their hand at cracking up a crowd without the safety of a script.

"Just about everyone on the improv team is from a different part of Ryerson, all different programs," says McGowan, who has seen interest in his club jump over the past year.

John Piekoszewski, who helps run the Carleton Improv Association in Ottawa, has see a similar boost in numbers recently.

"When I first started out we had eight to 10 people on the team," says the film studies student. "The past year, we've started doing shows in bars around town. We had 30 people show up at tryouts this year."

The Carleton team has a core group of 12 who perform at shows but encourages anyone, no matter what their level of experience, to come to weekly practice sessions. "You go away for two hours just to have a laugh, not take anything seriously," says Piekoszewski.

If you ever find youself in Times Square in New York City, look up at all the bright, flashing billboards.

Jeff Klause says he was only 11 years old when he designed the technology that IBM would use to control blinking lights such as these iconic ones.

The award-winning youth went on to become an entrepreneur, manufacturing bunk beds, marketing products at trade shows then moving on to website design and computers.

Now 36 years old, the CEO of Rainy Day Internet in Manitoba uses a hands-on approach that often finds him up a signal tower wearing his hard hat and working alongside his employees.

Jeff Klause

"I see the future and the potential in things and I surround myself with good people," he says.

"It always takes longer to achieve certain goals. Accept the reality in each situation and adjust your goals."

Klause is a man of technology and vision but most importantly he has the passion and drive to see his ideas through to the end.

"I'm always thinking about the bigger picture. But I also climb towers because people don't work for me, they work with me."

Jeff's tips

Klause's thoughts on business

- Have passion and energy See something through to the end regardless of the mountains you encounter.
- Give back I've been volunteering since I was 13 years old.

Close call for Patriots

Tom Brady got all the help he needed to get the New England Patriots into the Super Bowl.

Thank you, Billy Cundiff.

The Baltimore Ravens kicker shanked a 32-yard field goal with 11 seconds left and the Patriots escaped with a 23-20 victory in the AFC championship game on Sunday.

Usually, vintage Brady doesn't need much assistance in championship settings, but the Patriots' much-maligned defence came through, and Brady's one-yard touchdown dive with 11:29 left proved to be the winning points.

PATRIOTS	RAVENS
23	20

"Well, I sucked pretty bad today, but our defence saved us," Brady said after throwing for 239 yards, with two interceptions and, for the first time in 36 games, no TD passes. "I'm going to try to go out and do a better job in a couple of weeks, but I'm proud of this team, my teammates."

Brady waited out the final tense minutes on the sideline, and then celebrated with the rest of his team when Cundiff's attempt went wide left. The Ravens looked on in horror.

Next up as the Patriots (15-3) chase their fourth Super Bowl trophy in Brady's and coach Bill Belichick's tenure in New England is the winner of Sunday's NFC championship game between the Giants and 49ers. The Super Bowl is Feb. 5 in Indianapolis.

In their last trip to the big game, the Patriots had an 18-0 record when they were stunned by the Giants four years ago. They won the NFL championship for the 2001, 2003 and 2004 seasons. This time, they head to the Super Bowl with a 10-game winning streak.

"We're going to try to go out and kick some butt in a couple of weeks," said Brady, whose fifth trip to the Super Bowl will equal John Elway's achievement with Denver.

Raptors lose eighth game in a row

After Mo Williams' big fourth quarter helped the Los Angeles Clippers send the Toronto Raptors to their eighth straight loss, he preferred to share the credit with his teammates.

"I didn't do it by myself. I mean, let's get that straight," Williams said after scoring his team's first 17 points of the fourth quarter, finishing with 26 in the Clippers' 103-91 victory on Sunday.

Williams went to work in the fourth and helped Los Angeles open up a 93-73 lead with 7:22 remaining after Toronto trimmed a 22-point deficit to 13 on Leandro Barbosa's three-pointer with 8:25 to play.

CLIPPERS	RAPTORS
103	91

Blake Griffin had 18 points and nine rebounds for the Clippers. DeAndre Jordan had 16 points and 16 rebounds and Chauncey Billups had 14 assists.

Caron Butler finished with 15 points.

Barbosa scored 19 points and Linas Kleiza added 16 off the bench for the Raptors, who began a five-game road trip by missing their first 15 shots and were 35.8 per cent from the field overall.

DeMar DeRozan had 15 points and grabbed eight rebounds.

"Another loss — and the way we lost is definitely frustrating," DeRozan said. "We dug ourselves our own hole. We tried to fight back, but teams are too good in this league to allow that. Teams are going out there and jumping on our team. No one likes to take a loss, so we need to act like it from the start."

The Clippers never trailed. It took just 15 seconds after the opening tip for Griffin to slam home Randy Foye's alley-oop lob to start a 22-6 run.

Our starts have been horrendous," Toronto coach Dwane Casey said. "We compete harder in practice than we do to start the games. That is nothing against the Clippers. They've got a very solid basketball team, and they are going to be in the money at the end of the day."

Another sad day in Happy Valley

Ex-Penn State coach Paterno dies of cancer at 85, months after his legend was shattered in sex-abuse scandal

Happy Valley was perfect for Joe Paterno, a place where he not only won more football games than any other major U.S. college coach, but won them the right way: With integrity and sportsmanship. A place where character came first, championships second.

Behind it all, however, was an ugly secret that ran counter to everything the coach stood for.

Paterno, a sainted figure at Penn State, but scarred forever by the child sex-abuse scandal that led to his stunning dismissal, died in State College, Pa., Sunday at age 85.

His death came 65 days after his son Scott said his father had been diagnosed with a treatable form of lung cancer. The cancer was found during a follow-up visit for a bronchial illness.

Mount Nittany Medical Center said in a statement that Paterno died at 9:25 a.m. of "metastatic small cell carcinoma of the lung." Metastatic indicates an illness that has spread from one part of the body to an unrelated area.

The hospital says Paterno was surrounded by family members.

Paterno had been in the hospital since Jan. 13 for observation after what his family called minor complications from his cancer treatments. Not long before that, he conducted his only interview since losing his job, with The Washington Post. Paterno was described as frail, speaking mostly in a whisper. The second half of the two-day interview was conducted bedside.

His family released a statement Sunday morning to announce his death: "His loss leaves a void in our lives that will never be filled.

"He fought hard until the end, stayed positive, thought only of others and constantly reminded everyone of how blessed his life had been," the statement said. "His ambitions were far reaching, but he never believed he had to leave this Happy Valley to achieve them. He was a man devoted to his family, his university, his players and his community."

Paterno's death came just under three months following his last victory.

Two police officers were stationed to block traffic on the street where Paterno's home stands. The officers said the family had asked there be no gathering so Paterno's relatives could grieve privately.

Paterno's sons, Scott and Jay, arrived at the house late Sunday morning. Jay Paterno, who served as his father's quarterbacks coach, was crying.

Paterno built a program based on the credo of "Success with Honor." The man won 409 games and took the Nittany Lions to 37 bowl games and two national championships. More than 250 of his players went on to the NFL.

Paterno roamed the sidelines for 46 seasons and insisted that on-field success not come at the expense of high graduation rates.

But in the middle of his 46th season, the legend was shattered. Paterno was engulfed in a child sex-abuse scandal when a former trusted assistant, Jerry Sandusky, was accused of molesting 10 boys over a 15-year span.

Outrage built quickly when the state's top cop said the coach hadn't fulfilled a moral obligation to go to the authorities when a graduate assistant, Mike McQueary, told Paterno he saw Sandusky with a young boy in the showers of the football complex in 2002.

At a preliminary hearing for school officials, McQueary testified that he had seen Sandusky attacking the child with his hands around the boy's waist but said he wasn't 100 per cent sure it was intercourse. McQueary described Paterno as shocked and saddened and said the coach told him he had "done the right thing" by reporting the encounter.

Paterno waited a day before alerting school officials and never went to police.

"You know, (McQueary) didn't want to get specific," Paterno said in the Post interview. "And to be frank with you I don't know that it would have done any good, because I never heard of, of, rape and a man. So I just did what I thought was best."

Paterno said he would retire following the 2011 season, calling it "one of the great sorrows of my life."

But university trustees fired Paterno immediately. Graham Spanier, one of the longest-serving university presidents in the nation, also was fired.

Paterno and his wife, Sue, raised five children in State College.

He walked to home games and was greeted and wished good luck by fans on the street.

He also could be abrasive and stubborn, and he had his share of run-ins with his bosses or administrators.

Calls for his retirement reached a crescendo in 2004. The next year, Penn State went 11-1 and won the Big Ten. In the Orange Bowl, PSU beat Florida State, whose coach, Bobby Bowden, was eased out after the 2009 season after 34 years and 389 wins.

Like many others, he was outlasted by Paterno.

Chan wins his fifth title in record style

Skater tops 300 points, soaring past his world record of 280.98 Score at Canadian event won't count

Patrick Chan smiled and stuck up three fingers when his score was posted — a small gesture for a mammoth accomplishment.

The 21-year-old from Toronto demolished his previous world scoring mark Sunday and broke the 300-point barrier to claim his fifth Canadian senior men's figure skating title.

"I made the 300 club," Chan said with a laugh after finishing with 302.14 overall points. "I'm the only one, though. I'm a loner."

Chan produced one of the finest skates of his career, scoring 200.81 points for a free program that included two huge quadruple jumps and had the crowd at the Moncton Coliseum on its feet a full 30 seconds before his four-and-a-half minute program came to an end.

His score won't count as a world record as the Canadian championships are a domestic event. His 280.98 points at world championships last April in Moscow will remain the official world mark.

And Chan knows there will be critics who will question the high marks received on home turf.

"There are for sure people that are going to say that, but you can't really do anything about it," Chan said. "I'm not going to let people ruin my fun. And it's not just for me, it's fun for the audience and the other skaters."

Kevin Reynolds of Coquitlam, B.C., finished well back in second with 239.44 points, while Vancouver's Jeremy Ten was third with 207.50.

♈ Aries March 21-April 20
The more you focus on a problem the more of a problem it will become, so pull your mind away from it and concentrate on something positive.

♉ Taurus April 21-May 21
You should be aiming in some way to improve yourself today.

♊ Gemini May 22-June 21
Try taking a more laid-back approach to your problems. Try looking at the bright side instead of the dark.

♋ Cancer June 22-July 22
Someone with whom you have dealings of a business nature may try to cheat you today.

♌ Leo July 23-Aug.23
You might as well give up trying to have your way and let partners and colleagues call the shots.

♍ Virgo Aug. 24- Sept. 22
If others don't approve of your methods that's too bad: more than likely it will encourage you to use them even more (you can be perverse like that at times).

♎ Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23
This is potentially one of the best days (and weeks) of the year for you.

♏ Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 22
You may have to force yourself to be positive about what you are expected to do today.

♐ Sagittarius Nov. 23-Dec. 21 Go out into the world and have as much fun as possible.

♑ Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 20
Family problems and money issues may be getting you down but the planets suggest there are better days ahead and it won't be long before they arrive.

♒ Aquarius Jan. 21-Feb. 18
You are in the right place and the right frame of mind to make a new beginning of some sort.

♓ Pisces Feb. 19-March 20
You may have your doubts about a joint project of some kind but don't let them show. SALLY BROMPTON
